Deceased was about 28 years of age and was one of the most prosperous carpenters in the Electric City and possessed a wide circle of acquaintances who will be grieved to learn of his demise while in the prime of life. Several months ago health began to fail and all that medical skill could do was resorted to but of no avail. A few weeks ago he left for Jersey City to visit his brother, Knox, when he was suddenly taken ill and was obliged to be removed to the hospital, where he gradually sank, and died at 10 o'clock. The remains were taken to the residence of his mother, in Avoca, last evening, from which place interment will be made.

At her home, on Dickson avenue, Green Ridge, Mrs. Cornelius O'Donnell died after a short illness. ## LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

[Under this heading short letters of interest will be published when accompanied, for publication, by the writer's name. The Tribune will not be held responsible for opinions here expressed.]

About Capital Punishment.
Editor of the Tribune:
"I do not sympathize with the Democratic party's generous offer to give space for the opinions of any desiring to discuss subjects of public interest. I offer the following in regard to the death penalty, which is a subject of the case not brought out in the editorial and the opinions of the judges of various courts in today's Tribune.

About the year 1860, William Hill was stationed at Castleman, a mining town in Australia. Later he was stationed at Melbourne, and there lost his life in the following manner: There was a movement, by public conventions and speeches throughout the colonies, against capital punishment. Hill, a writer, then on the ground, was gaining popular influence every day and seriously affecting the administration of justice by the courts. A man convicted of murder in the first degree was, under the influence of the popular excitement, sentenced to life imprisonment.

Out of sympathy for the prisoners William Hill became a regular visitor at their cells and by mutual agreement the warden opened the cell of each prisoner in turn to admit Mr. Hill. He then turned the key on him for a private talk and prayer with the prisoners. One day after talking kindly to a murderer with whom he was locked in the cell for a brief time, he knelt and prayed for him. While in the act of praying with his eyes shut, the murderer quietly drew an iron bar from his cot and crushed the preacher's skull. The telegraph spread the news and the universal verdict was that the murderer ought to be hung.

That put an end to the agitation against capital punishment in Australia. The man was then tried for the murder of the preacher and was to be hanged. The other ministers went in to pray with him and under sentence of death he professed penitence and sought an interest in their prayers, which were professed to find peace with God; and the ministers believed he had.

Under the sentence of life imprisonment he remained an impatient murderer. But under the sentence of death, according to the original law, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man his blood shall be shed," he was brought to his senses. The case is well authenticated, being reported by a well-known missionary who was at Melbourne in 1864.

Had the death penalty been abolished in Australia at the time Mr. Hill was murdered, nothing more could have been done under the law with the murderer, who was already sentenced to be hanged. The extreme penalty of the law, if there was no capital punishment. With no capital punishment, the murderer serving a life sentence would be as far as the law is concerned, at liberty to commit any number of murders, which opportunity may thus be his way and there is no more punishment for him than the life sentence which has already been pronounced.

Can any one deny that it is a very dangerous thing for a hardened criminal, whose hands are already stained with blood, to be living under such conditions, that no matter what crimes he may commit, nor how many of them, the law has no more terrors for him?

PRISONER BECOMES INSANE.

General Buckner is Decidedly Opposed to Grover Cleveland's Re-election.

Nothing in Its Favor.

New York, April 29.—General Simon Bolivar Buckner, of Kentucky, who ran on the Democratic ticket nominated at Indianapolis for vice president, expressed some opinions on the free silver party and Grover Cleveland for a third term before he left for home today. He was at the Fifth Avenue hotel, and although over eighty years old, he walked around with the springy step of a man much younger. He is a great admirer of President Cleveland. A reporter asked him what he thought of the election of the Republican senator in his state, Mr. Deboe.

"I do not care to say anything about his election whatever."

"What about the gold standard or National Democracy, running a ticket of their own in 1900?"

"I do not see how the sound money Democrats can do anything else but keep up their organization and remain as a nucleus for the Democrats to rally upon for future campaigns. One thing is sure, we cannot go with the free silver Democrats, because they are no longer Democrats; they are Populists. They will have to cease to affiliate with the Populists and come to us. The Democrats must, if it is to be a free silver, would simply lose its identity in the Populist party and nothing more. Mr. Bynum was right when he said we would keep up the fight and organize for the future. There is nothing else for us to do. We are in Kentucky alone, there are 70,000 sound money Democrats, a majority of whom, of course, voted directly for McKinley. And there are thousands of sound money Democrats in other states."

THE REAL ISSUE.
The veteran general smoked his long-stemmed pipe, and, among other things, said: "It was the Indianapolis convention last fall that finally determined the issue. The Republicans were re-elected because the issue was not protection. That gold Democratic convention settled the issue conclusively, and by the aid of Democrats McKinley won. These Democrats now stand ready to support the national Democracy when the time comes. As I said, we must keep our organization intact and not affiliate with Populism."

The general is a friend of ex-President Cleveland, but he does not agree with a third term. "I have a high regard for Mr. Cleveland," he added, "but I cannot think for a moment that the third term of Mr. Cleveland or any man would be beneficial to this republic. If we go ahead and destroy precedent after precedent, why, after the next election, the question of a third term will be undetermined. I would not vote for my father for a third Presidential term, and while I have a great admiration for Mr. Cleveland, I do not think he could carry three per cent. of the Democratic vote, if he should by any chance be nominated for a third term. It does not make any difference the fact that one term has intervened. We do not wish one man president three times. Washington's precedent is almost an unwritten law, and I do not believe the American people would vote to place any one in the White house three times. Why, General Grant, the great soldier, could not even get the nomination for a third term, and why should there be talk of nominating another man? Whatever a man's ability, he has no right to be president more than twice. Mr. Bayard is a fine gentleman, eloquent in speech and all of that, but when he thinks that it would be best for this country to have ex-President Cleveland any man as chief magistrate three times he is sadly mistaken. We do not wish to knock all of our patriotic ideas on the head and ignore the work of the wise founders of this republic."
